The Lions president A. H. Krusemark, Jr. reported that the waste paper drive sponsored by the Lions club resulted in the collection and sale of over three tons of waste paper, sold to the Jahneke Bros. concern and a check for $33.00 from this concern was turned over to the Treasurer, John Lühring.

He has almost every known variety of perennial and annual flowers most of which will be in blossom by Sunday.

And now for his annual treat for the public. He announces that his garden will be open for inspection to all who wish to enjoy this lovely sight with him on Sunday afternoon May 24. His home is located on the North east corner of 96th street and 5400 west, Oak Lawn, Ill.

Mr. Wilson extends a cordial welcome to all, and I personally can say that anyone making this trip will be amply repaid.

STUDENTS OF RURAL SCHOOLS GRADUATE AT FRANKFORT

The rural schools of the Lincoln Highway district held their graduation exercises at the Frankfort school gym Tuesday evening. An interesting program preceded the presentation of diplomas. Mr. Skinner of Joliet delighted the audience with his feats of magic. County Superintendent of Schools Louis Bottino addressed the graduating classes and in the course of his remarks touched on the present world wide war situation and declared that when peace comes again, those setting at the peace table must consider the feelings of the various nations including those defeated in the struggle and that they must guard against any acts of jealousy or aggression to create in the peace proposals if a lasting peace is to be assured, otherwise the same disastrous results realized from the last peace conference will again blight the world within the next quarter of a century or more.

Mr. Bottino further pointed out the great part the newspapers and

TO MAKE SURVEY OF TRUCKS USED IN HAULING MILK

In order to determine the present and future truck needs in the transportation of milk and dairy products to and from plants, the War Production Board, Washington, D. C., has requested the regional Motor Transportation Chicago, to make a survey in Illinois of trucks used for such purposes, reports Wilfred Shaw, director of milk marketing for the Illinois Agricultural Association.

The survey will include all trucks used to transport milk and cream to dairy plants and those used either regularly or occasionally in hauling finished products away from the plants, but will not cover trucks used for wholesale or retail distribution of milk in bottles.

The survey is being made by the Illinois Dairy Industry Committee, of which Shaw is co chairman of the regional Motor Transportation Committee of the Office of Defense Transportation. Donald Kirkpatrick, leal and general counsel for the Illinois Agricultural Association, is a member of the Regional Motor Transportation Committee of the Office of Defense Transportation.

According to Purse, the survey is being made for the purpose of determining as quickly as possible certain specific information regarding the present available vehicles used in the transportation of milk and milk products and the estimated requirements for such facilities during the 2nd, 3rd and 4th quarters of 1942. A questionnaire is being mailed to all dairy plants in Illinois to secure the desired information.

The Mokena Postoffice and Mokena State Bank report bond sales of $20,000 during the months of January, February, March and April.

The total number of wage earners in the Village of Mokena are 315. Out of this number, 308 pledged; 4 were unable to be contacted, and only 3 people refused to pledge in the entire Village.

The committee wishes to thank all of the Minute men and also all the pledgers for their splendid cooperation.

OBSERVE CITIZENSHIP DAY AT MOKENA

An inspiring Citizenship program was presented last Sunday afternoon in the Mokena school gym under the auspices of the Mokena Civic Association with Attorney Chas. B. Elder in charge as chairman.

The four clergymen of the village, Rev. Theo. Haebele, St. John's Evang. church, Rev. Walter Geffert, Immanuel Lutheran church, Rev. John Templeton of the local Methodist church and Father Arthur of St. Mary's Catholic church, spoke taking as their subjects a number of the guarantees of the Bill of Rights.

Attorney Elder presented citizenship certificates to seven new voters of the community.

The program was colorful and inspiring but only a very small audience was present. In this day and time of national strain and stress people should realize more than ever before what a priceless heritage they possess in their citizenship and programs such as described above should draw full capacity houses instead of a mere handful.

War Effort Strengthened By High School Graduates

Armed Services, Industry and Farms Lure 1942 Students; Vocational Training Now Becoming Increasingly Important.

By WILLARD E. GIVENS

Executive Secretary, National Education Association.

IT HAS been estimated that over one million boys and girls will leave high school this spring with their diplomas.

It is this same group of boys and girls, the youth of the nation, who were figuratively being spoken to when a commencement speaker said to a group of graduates before him:

"You have seen more history than you have read."

During the first half of 1942, the pages of history have been turning fast, recording the names of men and their deeds in the greatest drama of all ages.

And now today, not only the high school graduate, but all those who have read the story of man's upward struggle from the early dawn of history to the present time, recognize the climax of history in which they are now living. Each and everyone—especially the high school graduate—is seeking to find the proper place, the suitable niche in it.

The Significance of Today.

Only to the man who is in some measure educated is it granted to know what is going on about him and to estimate its significance.

There is an old story of two peasants of Brabant who were weeding their crops on a sultry June day in 1815 when the guns of the Iron Duke greeted those of Bonaparte at Waterloo. One of the peasants lifted his eyes from his hoe and scanned the horizon. "Soule," he said, "it thunders; it will rain today!" As the guns of destiny broke the silence of their fields, these two peasants went on hoeing their vegetables, almost as ignorant as their beets and cabbages of what went on anywhere else in the world but in the limited sphere in which they moved.

The mental isolation of mankind in the not-so-long-ago unhappy days of the human race when one class of men was privileged to enjoy the culture and refinement of wide knowledge, and another class was doomed to live and die in vulgarity and poverty, is banished. Universal education has banished it. The high school, especially, is responsible for making this vastly different world from the one which existed a century and a quarter ago when Europe was rocked as it is today by the clash of arms and ideals—and only a few knew the issues and fewer still had a part in resolving them.

Today, high school students see themselves in the setting of time and events. In their hearts is a stirring that finds its expression in a common question, "What is my place in all this?"

Some of the boys may volunteer at once for service in the armed forces. The army has just announced that volunteers 18 and 19 years old may select training in the combat branch of their own preference—infantry, cavalry, artillery, tank corps, air corps, signal corps, or corps of engineers. Others will wait the decision of the Selective Service system as to where and when they may serve best.

Many graduates will continue their education under the direction of the navy, which has in operation plans by which graduates may go on to college and pursue studies in which they may earn college credits and at the same time prepare for more effective service in the navy. From this fleet, the huge two-ocean battle fleet now building in our shipyards will secure many of its commissioned officers.

War Industries to Hire Many.

A mechanized army calls for the utmost inventive and operational skills which the American people can produce. These Denver high school boys will know how to operate an electric semaphore if they should serve in the signal corps of the army.

Problems of Education Aired at Conference

At an annual meeting of the American Council of Education, Chicago, Ill., the following statements were made by educators:

Roscoe L. West, president, State Teachers college, Trenton, N. J., said: "People know intuitively that education must focus on getting folks ready to live better in their community than they would have lived otherwise. And by community I mean the nation and the world."

school graduates, boys and girls, will at once enter war-industries to help manufacture the guns and tanks and planes upon which the fighting men on far-flung battle fronts depend. The graduates may enter these industries at once, or they may enroll in one of many different types of training for more skilled service in the factories producing the material of war.

These training opportunities range from the elementary vocational schools where the simpler skills of the assembly line are acquired, to the technical and engineering schools of our great universities which are turning out recruits for highly responsible positions both in the armed forces and in industrial ranks.

The high schools themselves in many city school systems, and in some of the village schools serving farm areas, are equipped to offer a high grade vocational training. Some graduates who have taken non-vocational courses in high school will immediately begin such courses, if available, in the schools from which they have been graduated, or they will seek that kind of training in neighboring communities.

The federal government in June, 1940, appropriated $15,000,000 to equip and staff the rapidly expanding vocational departments and schools of less than college grade which had undertaken to train workers for defense industries. The need of workers was so urgent and the plan of meeting it so successful that subsequently other sums were appropriated for this purpose.

By March, this year, approximately 2,463,862 workers had been prepared for the war industries in this manner. This number is in addition to those trained for similar occupations in the vocational courses that constitute the normal service of the schools.

The demand for the graduates of these vocational courses is much greater than the supply and is increasing. According to the War Production board, over ten million additional war industry workers will be needed within the year ahead to staff plants now being built or expanded.

The vocational training activities in Oakland, Calif., are typical of those in many cities near great shipyards or other centers producing the machinery of war. On April 1, 1942, there were 199 classes in "defense training" in the Oakland schools, enrolling 3,901 students. This was 473 less than the number of students the Oakland schools were prepared to accommodate in this kind of work.

During January, February and March an average of 500 trained workers a month were placed in war manufacturing from this school system. There have never been sufficient trainees enrolled to meet the demand for riveters, chippers, caulkers, ship fitters, sheet metal

William J. Hamilton, superintendent of schools, Oak Park, Ill., spoke on this problem which faced education: "There is evidence that during the post-war period, conditions pertaining to the support of the public schools will not be improved. The demand for social security is already being given much consideration as the principal factor in the new social order and may supersede education in importance. . . public education will become involved in a confusing mass of legislation."

Victory vs. Luxury

"John's older brother who finished high school in 1941 burned up the tires of his old jalopy on the highways at sixty miles an hour, either pleasure or business bent. John will ride a bus or walk to 'go places and do things.'" Susan who graduates in 1942 will find that permanents, fluffy evening dresses, silk and nylon hose were luxuries that her older sister of 1940 did not bequeath to her. Youth, like the rest of us, must sacrifice some of the refinements of existence, and before the struggle is over, may forego some of the necessities."

workers, electricians, ship carpenters, joiners and other skilled trades.

There is opportunity of some kind today for youth everywhere. All can join in the "great adventure" in some capacity. This is true for girls as well as for boys. Many girls are taking their places in the war industries. The great expansion of offices in Washington and other centers of administration of the war effort issue calls for typists, stenographers, clerks and secretaries. Many girls are enrolling in nursing courses which lead to direct or indirect service, for some of which officer's commissions are available, in the armed forces.

The kinds of military work for girls to choose from are numerous, and announcements of further opportunities are expected from time to time.

Oftentimes the impulse to seek service far afield is ill advised. There is also the home front. Whole states must be prepared to resist invasion from land, sea or air. Civilian defense is vital. First aid, air raid duty, auxiliary fire and police service must be manned and administered.

In hundreds of agricultural communities high school graduates will immediately lay aside their diplomas for cultivator handles and hoes. There is much truth in the slogan that "Food will win the war." The

Collapse of German
Morale Seen Possible
In December . . . IF
AEF Had Reached

Bell Syndicate—WNU Features.

WASHINGTON.—In view of the clamor of Soviet sympathizers in Britain for the opening up of a second front against Germany it is interesting to examine all the "facts" we have in regard to what may happen when the mud on the Russian front becomes passable.

First we must remember the surprise of last summer. Both the British and United States intelligence staffs were certain that the Reds could not last much more than four weeks. High army officers lost bets on it with Russian enthusiasts.

One wager, made on army "information," was that the Nazis would defeat Russia and win peace by September 1. This writer won such a wager, but must confess that he figured the Russians would be driven back to the Ural mountains by that time!

When it must be remembered that at no time have the Soviet successes in driving the Nazis back been anything like as great as most of our people have assumed.

The best evidence of this is that the Germans prepared a line of defense, after they realized they would not make the break-through for which they had hoped, and at only two points along the whole line, from the Arctic to the Black sea, have they been actually forced back to that line.

Soviet Generals Now Know

Assuming that the Nazis have no important new surprise weapon or method, the Soviet generals are familiar with what they have to face, know how to fight a sound retreating action when attacked by superior force at any one place, and how to make every Nazi gain expensive in man power.

How long this war will last is very likely to depend on the success of the coming German offensive. If their losses should be as heavy as they have been this past winter, and as they were during their successful advance last summer and fall, and if they should not make a really spectacular success, the Germans might surprise the world by staging a morale collapse by December—this year.

As a matter of fact this is the confident expectation of some very well-informed people. It should be added that this is not wishful thinking, on their part. It affects some manufacturers who are wondering how they can protect themselves from serious losses if the war should end, suddenly, before the general expectation.

Even such a desirable development does not mean that the United States and Britain would have peace by the end of this year.

But a collapse in Germany would leave British and U. S. power free to concentrate on the Far East.

It is this conviction which has led so many prominent persons, in the United States and in Britain, to urge the "second front" against Germany. It is on the Russian front, they think, that the war can be won, and won this year. They are figuring on the state of morale inside Germany when next winter closes in, with no brighter prospects of ultimate victory for the Germans than they had last winter.

"I know the Russians can go on taking it, and can win if we give them help," said a high official to the writer. "I am not sure the Germans can stand a continuance of their losses on the Russian front."

Reasons for British Activity in N. Africa

Since Dunkirk, Britain has lived in daily fear of a Nazi invasion via Ireland. This is the key to the puzzle which has caused so many uplifted eyebrows—and worse—in America since the announcement that a strong United States expeditionary force had landed in Ulster.

"Why," critics all over this country have been asking, "have we not sent troops to help General MacArthur instead of to Ireland?" There are two answers. It was considered, during the period between Pearl Harbor and the time troops were landed in Ulster, that to attempt to send transports loaded with troops across the Pacific to Manila would be inviting disaster—the drowning of thousands of troops without doing MacArthur's heroes any good.

The sending of troops to Ulster was motivated by strategy which has been explained only partially to the American people. Had those troops been sent three months earlier, there might have been a very different story in North Africa. Field Marshal Rommel might be a prisoner today, his command killed or captured, had that been done.

PLEDGE FOR AN AMERICAN
I would rather pay taxes to Uncle Sam than tribute to Hirohito.
I would rather be socked by Washington than hocked by Tokyo.
I would rather give till it hurts than to be blackjacked when my feelings won't make any difference.

I would rather go all out for America NOW than to find myself "all in" under the Japs and Nazis.

Valley Forge was tough, but any existence under Japan, or Adolf would make it seem like a Valhalla. A democracy fumbles, hesitates, muddles and bungles, but I still prefer it to any form of government that concentrates on dirty work to such an extent that it gets most of the high marks in gangsterism.

I would rather be exasperated by Washington, D. C., than silenced by Tokyo or Berlin.

I would rather excuse some of the blunders by my form of government than not be permitted to hear about the blunders of a new form of government.

I prefer to co-operate with my American leaders in every way rather than to take a chance on a leadership in which what I want to do will make no difference whatever.

I think the need of the moment is a switch from the More Abundant Life, and that it should be made while there is still a choice.

I believe that The Forgotten Man is in danger of becoming The Forgotten Manikin unless he wakes up and becomes the Patriot Who Never Forgets.

Mrs. Roosevelt says she may have a White House vegetable garden this year. All we can say is that it ruins a railroad trip if you have to worry about weeding.

Our fear is that the First Lady, becoming quite confused, may get the timetable and the seed store folder mixed. It is pretty exasperating to find that string beans leave on track eight daily except holidays and carry a diner, while the 8:15 for Chicago must be planted in rows one foot apart and watched for bugs and worms.

GHOST PLANE

By ARTHUR STRINGER W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: To keep Norland Airways in business, Alan Slade has agreed to fly a so-called scientist named Frayne and his assistant, Karnell, to the wild Anawotto country of northern Canada, where Frayne expects to find the breeding ground of the trumpeter swan. Slade suspects Frayne of having other plans than swan-hunting, but he has paid them enough to enable Slade's partner, Cruger, to buy a Lockheed they have been needing. Meanwhile, Alan goes with Lynn Morlock, daughter of the local doctor, to give first aid treatment to a flyer named Slim Tumstead, who has been hurt in a fight. He learns that Tumstead knows about the new plane and about Frayne. While Slade is on his way north with Frayne and Karnell, someone holds up Cassidy, night watchman for Norland Airways, and steals the Lockheed. All Cassidy can tell Cruger is that the thief wore a mask and that he headed north in the plane. Now Slade and his passengers are flying into a head wind, and Frayne has just complained that they are not making good time.

Now continue with the story.

CHAPTER VI

"It is very empty country," the swan-hunter observed.

"Fine and empty," said Karnell, who looked up slightly startled by an admonishing elbow dig from his companion.

"It'll be better in an hour or two," Slade told them. "We'll be coming out on scrub timber and heavier ridges. Then you'll see your last mine camp or two along the Ashibik."

He went on for half an hour of silence, conscious of the two heads bent over the chart, the mumble of voices, and the repeated studious peering through the poised binoculars.

"Weather's clearing," he cried out, half an hour later, when he sighted blue through the torn wisps of gray. "That means less wind to buck."

But a glance at his fuel-gauge suddenly lowered his spirits.

"We can't make the Anawotto," he announced as he retarded his throttle to conserve fuel. "We'll have to land at Lake Avikaka and fill up."

Slade, pointing to his gauge, could see Frayne's face tighten a little with annoyance.

"What is at Lake Avikaka?" questioned his passenger.

"Just two old sourdoughs who have a camp there on the fringe of Nowhere."

"Sourdoughs? What are they?"

"Just two funny old birds who happen to be friends of mine. I keep a gas cache in their back yard."

He could hear the two voices conferring. It gave him the feeling of being excluded from something that might be of importance to him.

"That's the Kasakana there, just ahead of us," Slade explained, "the stream that looks like a twisted wire. We'll have about sixty miles of it. Then we'll land just where it empties into Lake Avikaka."

Frayne, tight-lipped, inspected his chart.

"Who are these—these old sourdoughs as you term them?" he asked.

"Just two old lone-fire prospectors who've panned gold and staked claims all the way from Arizona up to the Circle," Slade explained. "With an itch," he added, "to be always pushing out to what seems like the last frontier. They're pretty good old scouts. You'll like 'em."

Frayne's expression failed to confirm that claim.

"For what do they prospect?" he asked.

"Gold, of course," answered Slade. "They won't interfere with your swan-hunting."

Frayne's side-glance seemed in search of possible second meanings.

Slade looked for some sign of life from the cabin between its sheltering rock shoulders. All he saw, as he nosed cautiously down to the lake end, was a gray plume of smoke from the shack chimney. It impressed him, in the midst of the gloomy ridges furred with stunted timber, as a sort of pennon of valor, a flag defying the forces of nature.

It was a brave little outpost, the flyer repeated as he swung lower. But he could catch no glimpse of either Minty Buckman or Zeke Pratt. And it was seldom he found them far from that cockeyed old windlass and hoist of theirs.

Then his heart lightened. They must have heard him, after all.

For two ragged old figures emerged from the shack door and ran about the rock slope in small circles, waving arms as they went.

One figure wore an apron of butcher's linen which he tore from his shoulders and whirled in the air while the other executed a creaky dance step about him.

"Those old wilderness waifs are sure glad to see us," Slade observed as his ship landed and lost headway. Frayne did not share in his excitement.

"We go on to the Anawotto," he suggested, "as soon as you have refueled."

Slade, stiff and tired, rose from his seat.

"Not on your life. We bunk with these bushwhackers tonight. I want a hot meal and seven hours of sleep."

Two ragged old figures emerged from the shack door and ran about.

"But your friends," said Frayne, "are not my friends."

"But come and meet 'em," said Slade, leaping ashore with his mooring line. He was halfway up the bank when the two old sourdoughs descended on him. They circled about him and slapped his shoulders, shouting with shrill and child-like excitement at the unlooked-for break in their solitude.

"How are you, puddle-jumper! By crickets, it's Lindy!"

Slade knew, even before he felt their hearty handclaps, that he was among friends. They may have looked uncouth in their patched and ragged Mackinaws. But in the crow-footed old eyes above the grizzled whiskers he could see open affection.

"Bring me them darnin' needles, son?" questioned Zeke when the body-slapping was over.

"Sure thing," said Slade, producing a package from his jacket pocket. "And that oilstone you've been hankering for." Then he lowered his voice. "How's the color been showing?"

"Swell," said Minty. "We struck a vein that'll make your eyes bug out. But keep it under your hat, son."

Slade glanced toward his plane. "I've got a couple of visitors for you," he announced.

The two old faces promptly hardened.

"What're they after?" was Minty's quick inquiry.

"They're after swans' eggs," announced Slade.

"Swans' eggs?" said Zeke. "That don't sound natural."

"I know it, Zeke, but we've got to take their word for it. They're headed for the Anawotto to dig out the breeding ground of the trumpeter."

Zeke, from under his shaggy brows, inspected the strangers.

"How'd you know they ain't field scouts?"

Slade smiled at the concern on the seamed old face.

"I'll bring 'em up," said Slade. Solitude, he had long since learned, always left a bush-worker morosely suspicious of unidentified intruders. He had even known some of those lone-fire gold-seekers to greet the casual prowler with a flurry of buckshot.

Yet he himself was a little puzzled, when he reached the landing stage, to find that Frayne had decided to have his man Karnell remain in the plane cabin.

"You're the captain," said Slade. But his meditative eye passed casually over the gas drums that stood on the spruce rack which made them so easy to roll aboard. And it was always better to be safe than sorry.

He was whistling as he climbed into the cabin and busied himself for a minute or two with his instrument board. Then, as his two passengers conferred at the water's edge, he quietly abstracted the motor's breaker assembly and slipped it into his pocket. He felt that it was as well, all things considered, to know that his Snow-Ball Baby was definitely bedded down for the night.

"You'll like these two old codgers," Slade persisted as he followed the reluctant-footed Frayne up the shore slope.

Frayne, however, remained silent and abstracted as he entered the shack where the smell of frying bacon mingled with the aroma of three sourdough bread-loaves just turned out of their baking pans. He noted the glowing cookstove and the orderly dish shelves, the spring traps and the shooting irons in the shack corner, the wall bunks with their abraded Hudson Bay blankets, the floor rugs of wolfskin, the home-made table and chairs darkened by time and smoke. Everything bore an air of frontier roughness, of ingenious expediences in a land of strictly limited resources. But the general result was one of craftily-won comfort, of security obtained through toil and persistence. Even the meal the two old-timers prepared for their guests was an ample one.

But as the meal was made away with an odd constraint hung over the men seated about the rough table.

"I see you have a radio," Frayne observed as he sipped at his second cup of coffee.

"No, but we have a radio," Frayne observed as he sipped at his second cup of coffee.

THURSDAY: THE LAST DAY WITH THE DISCIPLES

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22:14-30. GOLDEN TEXT—This day in remembrance of me.—Luke 22:19.

The last day! How quickly it comes, and how fleeting yet meaningful its moments.

We do not know what our Lord did on Wednesday of Passion Week. In all probability He remained in Bethany to rest in fellowship with His friends. Surely He needed that day of quiet, for that which had gone before, difficult and strenuous as it had been, was as nothing to that which lay before Him.

Late on Thursday He and His disciples came to the upper room where Peter and John had already made preparation for the observance of the Passover (Luke 22:8). This feast had (since that great and awful night of Israel's redemption out of Egypt's bondage) pointed forward to the Christ and to His cross as the fulfillment of the type of redemption by the shedding of blood. But now the hour had come for Him to give Himself in that death, and so He set aside the Passover (because it has been fulfilled) to establish the great Christian feast of remembrance—the Lord's table, which now shows forth His death till He come.

I. The Final Passover (vv. 14-18).

Our Lord looked forward with intense desire to the Passover which He now observed with His disciples, for it was the last celebration of that feast recognized by God. All that it had foreshadowed of deliverance and hope was fulfilled in Him who now sat at the table. He had moved forward with resolute purpose to this day when His mission on earth was to be accomplished, and He was to become the Christian's Passover lamb (I Cor. 5:7).

The fact that He had looked forward to it with desire does not minimize the deep darkness of either Gethsemane or Calvary. Remember that, when in the garden He faced that hour and thought of the possibility of the cup being taken from Him, He said to the Father, "Not what I will, but what thou wilt." Praying concerning the same matter (in John 12:27), He said, "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour."

II. The First Communion (vv. 19, 20).

Taking the unleavened bread and the unfermented wine of the Passover which had just been observed, Jesus established a new feast, the Christian feast of remembrance, which we call communion or the Lord's table.

His words are significant, "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come" (I Cor. 11:26). At the Lord's table His followers find spiritual strength in recalling His death for them, but they also find joy as they remember that He is to come again. They thus testify to the world that they believe and cherish these truths.

This feast is rightly called "communion," for down through the ages and until He does come the saints of God have at His table sweet communion with Him and with one another. Let us not neglect it!

Our Lord also spoke of the cup as "my blood of the new testament." The word "testament" means covenant. The Lord's table therefore speaks of our allegiance to Him, of our loyalty to our Lord, and our devotion to His service. That is why the Christian Church speaks of communion as a sacrament, a word from the Latin sacramentum, meaning oath, and essentially an oath of allegiance.

III. The Folly of the Disciples (vv. 21-30).

Someone may say, "That point does not belong with the other two. Both the Passover and the Lord's Supper are for the joyful remembrance of deliverance and redemption." The objection is well taken except for one thing—we are dealing with human beings as they are, not as they should be and could be by the grace of God.

Here in the inner circle of the twelve there was one traitor. It seems impossible, but apparently Judas had maintained such outward conduct as to turn no suspicion in his direction, even though all along he had in his heart the blackest of treachery against his Lord. A sad and soul-searching fact is here revealed, that it is possible for one to make a high profession of faith in Christ and even so to live as to give no cause for criticism, and yet to be unregenerate and in fact the enemy of Christ.

What about the strife regarding position? Shameful as we agree that it was, it still goes on in the church. Not even the remembrance of our Lord's death and the reminder that He is coming again is enough to keep men from wanting to be great.

Dear Friends:

Received your letter today and was very glad to hear from you. Thought I'd better answer it while I was in the mood.

The weather tonight would be nice for ducks, but not for men. I am still barracks janitor. I guess we are going into our summer uniform tomorrow. We were supposed to go into them the first of May, then they put it off until the 12th, now its the 14th.

Yes I got all the packages that you mentioned in your letter of May the first. And was well pleased with all of it. Yes, I receive the Tinley Park Times every week. Usually on the noon mail call on Sunday. I sure enjoy getting the paper as I like to read what the other fellows are doing and where they are at. Also what is going on in Tinley.

Yes I smoke cigarettes and once in a while a pipe. I don't need any razor blades or anything else at present. I have enough blades and shaving cream to last me about 6 months at least. I'll try to send you a couple of pictures of myself in summer uniform if I take any soon.

I am still about the same as ever. Although I am not as good as I should be. Well I guess I'll close wishing you all the best of everything. Giving my best to all of you.

Sincerely your friend,
Pvt. O. V. Barr, 6th Div. Co. B, 6th Engineer Battalion, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Dear Friends:

Just a line to let you know of a change in my address.

Yours very truly,

Tinley Park Times

Dear Sirs:

It has been some time since I had the occasion to write to you. Since then I have been transferred to the Naval Training School at Great Lakes. I am being trained in the duties of a signalman and a Quartermaster.

These ratings will be obtained aboard ship. Now, we are being trained for them.

Duties of a signalman are well known. It is a division of the Communications branch. It includes semaphore, radio, blinker etc. A Quartermaster, unlike the army, has a much more difficult position. He must know the signalman's branch, plus navigation, for he is on the Quarter deck, from where originates his name, with the officers.

[We must all be quiet about our jobs, as should all good people. While it is very true that the minute bits of knowledge we have concerning military life or routine civilian life are in their isolated state worthless, nevertheless, a piecing together of these little items, a synthesis as it were, results in a complete picture. Just as pieces of a jigsaw puzzle seem to be a kaleidoscopic variety of wood, an intelligent application and intense patience results in a completed picture.]

This analogy is true. There are leaks in our Ship of State. If we want to keep afloat, these gaps must be plugged.

Our enemy is doing to our nation's plans what an individual does to a jigsaw puzzle. It is piecing loose talk into comprehensive words and translating these words into ship sinkings, sabotage, loss of our mens lives.

All this goes to say that I can't write and tell you of our life here. I enjoy it. I am enthusiastic for it. Please continue to send the Times to me.

Sincerely,
M. J. Esposito, A. S.

(Editor's note: We were glad to hear from you and so glad also that Our Boys are enjoying their Home Town paper. We send it to all of you each week. We have answered your letter and hope it will give you pleasure. We enjoy publishing all the boys' letters. Good luck to you all.)

May 9, 1942

Dear Mom and Bill:

I have received two letters from you in the past month, I doubt tho' thru any fault of yours. I was sure glad to hear from you. The first was mailed Easter. Quite newsy. The second letter was mailed May 4th, received it today, very good time. I'm not on the Saratoga as yet. That's just an address for the present. Mr. O'Hare was in this squadron. I was assigned to his plane as a second mech. Two men to a plane. The plane captain or 1st mech.

I sent you or wired you rather a dozen roses for Mothers Day. Did you get them? Tomorrow is Mothers Day I'll be thinking of you Mom.

Weather is getting warmer here. There are some beautiful mountains here. Customs are the same as Americans so far as I can see. Write soon. Best wishes and love to all.

DEFENSE NEWS

Eight million citizens of Illinois have been requested to pause for one minute at 1:25 p.m. Central War Time Sunday, June 7, and face to the West in silent tribute to the heroes who have and are defending the nation's outposts in the Pacific.

One minute earlier, from one end of the state to the other sirens will sound, church bells toll and whistles blow calling attention to the people of the state to the treacherous attack on Pearl Harbor six months prior to the hour.

This dramatic outpouring of patriotism will be the first event of a full week of activities in Illinois suggested by Governor Dwight H. Green as a Dedication to Victory Week celebration.

At a special meeting of the Illinois State Council of Defense detailed plans were laid for the June 7 to June 14 celebration in which the entire citizenry of the state will be asked to participate.

The purpose of the week will be to enlist every resident of the state in the job of winning the war; to solidify the people in their all out war effort and to pay tribute to the nation's heroes in the armed forces.

The Council voted unanimously to put the full force of its state wide organization behind the plan and will ask its more than 530 Local and County Councils of Defense to cooperate. In addition to these councils the standing and advisory committees of the State Council will participate.

Every city and community will be asked to organize for a full week of activities which will include parades, special programs at noon luncheons, Town Hall meetings, radio broadcasts, special church services and displaying of flags on every home and factory building for the full week.

"I believe that a week of this kind" the Governor said, will help even more to solidify the people and bring home to them in a tangible way that this is an all out war. We in Illinois are not lagging. Most of the people are anxious and willing to do something and I know of nothing that is more vital than strengthening the moral of the home front.

Riverview Opens

Painters, electricians and craftsmen are now putting finishing touches on the more than one hundred rides which line the two mile midway of Riverview Park, in preparation for the opening Wednesday, May 20.

Every attraction in the park has been completely redone in brilliant reds, greens, yellows, blues and purples. Buildings and ride frameworks and supports are white. Landscape gardeners have spent many hours on trees, flowers, shrubs and lawns.

"All service men in uniform and their dates will be admitted free at the gates this year," Geo. A. Schmidt Park president, announced.

The Comet, a new thrill ride as fast as its name implies, is expected to be among the top ranking favorites with visitors of all ages this season. But it will have to hurry to match the popularity of the Bobs, the mile a minute roller coaster, the Fly-in Turns, the smooth as glass speed ride, the Greyhound, the Pair O Chute 220 foot twin parachutes and the Blue Streak.

There are also many rides in the Park to entertain the children, such as miniature streamlined train, Kid-lyland, and the Merry Go Round.

New Farm Buildings

The government has restricted the construction of new buildings on the farm, as elsewhere, to such structures as are needed in the war effort states Farm Advisor, C. A. Hughes. "The decision, to a certain extent, on the erection of new farm buildings has been placed in the hands of the USDA War Board for Cook County. The general provisions, as we have been able to figure out the rules, are that on the repair of a farm house, there is a limitation of $500 expenditure over a 12 month period, without securing permission to build. The meaning of repair is the restoration without change in design of any portion of a building to sound working condition where it has been rendered unsafe or unfit for service by wear, tear, etc. Any kind of residential structure that can be built for $500, such as a bunk house, may be built without getting permission from the War Board.

"Agricultural construction, which mean barn, storage house, etc., that does not exceed $1000 may likewise be built without receiving permission. Residential construction where a building has been damaged or destroyed by fire, tornado or some other similar cause may be replaced as was without permission. However, on any of these structures where scarce materials will be used a priorities rating must be secured. The method of doing this is to go to your dealer and have him make out a Form PD-200. This may be secured from the Priorities Division, War Production Board, Temporary building E, Washington, D. C. After this form is properly executed and signed it is to be turned in to the USDA Cook County War Board which meets regularly each Thursday at Blue Island, Ill. Forms may be sent to Carl Bormet, Chairman of the War Board, care of Farm Bureau office, Blue Island. The War Board meets each week and they will pass upon these requests and forward them to the state office with their recommendations. From the state office they will go to Washington after which a permit will or will not be granted.

"The Cook County War Board wishes to build a barn when his existing these rules with reference to farm buildings in Cook county that they have no alternative but to follow the strict rules that are laid down, which by and large means that any structure that is built will be a necessary one towards the war effort. In other words a farmer that wishes to build a new barn when his old one is in fair condition may not expect to get such permission. On the whole it will be the farms with a past history of production that may expect to receive permission to put up certain buildings on their place. These have to be passed on by the Washington priorities authorities. The only thing that the local board can pass on, is whether according to the rules, a new structure costing more than the amounts specified is actually needed in the war production effort on the local farm.

"It is also pointed out by material dealers in the county that farmers expecting to make such repairs on buildings should get their orders in as soon as possible because as the war effort increases more material, as lumber, is being taken over by the government for war plants construction.

High Selling Steers

Martin Fry and sons, well known Will county stockmen and farmers, had one of the high selling steer droves reported in the Friday trade at the Chicago Stock Yards during the past week.

They shipped in 28 head of 1259 pound beeves that sold straight at $14.25 per cwt. These cattle were purchased on the Chicago market last November at a cost of $9.25 per cwt., their owners reported, averaging 915 pounds per head at that time. They showed good gains, both in weight and price.

Chicago swine prices reached peak levels of the month, to date, on Friday's market, with an extreme top of $14.25 per cwt., the highest in 16 days; and the average price of the trade on that day was $14.10, highest since April 29.

ORLAND PARK

The last meeting of the school year for the Orland Park PTA was held Thursday evening, May 14 in the school building and closed a very useful and successful year under Mrs. Chas. Maddox's administration. The reports of the various committee chairmen showed a year of unusual activity in all departments and a record of constructive accomplishment. The membership total for the year was 66.

Reports on the bunco and card party recently held to raise funds to finish payment on the sound equipment recently donated to the school by the PTA showed that sufficient profit had been made to accomplish this and leave a balance of $30.00 which has been set aside to apply on some other project for the school to be determined later. It was also voted to furnish the ice cream for the annual school picnic as has been done in past years.

The newly elected officers were installed into their respective stations by Mrs. Ralph Town, program chairman for the year, who also presented the official Past President's Pin to Mrs. Maddox, the retiring president.

Mrs. Roxie Brown who has achieved wide spread recognition for the excellence of her book review, presented an interesting and entertaining review of "No Life for a Lady", by Agnes Morley Cleveland.

Following the meeting, refreshments were served by Mrs. Stewart Loebe, Mrs. James Creer and Mrs. Paul Oelke.

The WSCS of the Methodist church will hold an all day meeting in the church Thursday May 28. The usual pot luck luncheon will be served at noon.

Mrs. Mabel Ekberg, who for several years has conducted the Swedish Coffee House in Orland Park announces that after June 1st, this popular Orland institution will be closed.

This will be sad news, not only for Orlandites but for a host of surrounding communities who have made it a practice to drop into the Coffee House for a well cooked and well served dinner or luncheon. The fame of Mabel's dinners as well as her sparkling personality, has also attracted many folks from Chicago, Blue Island, Roseland and Pullman.

Mrs. Ekberg's plans for the future are indefinite and will not be announced until she has had a well earned rest. She wishes to thank the folks of Orland for their patronage and support and to express her appreciation to the many business firms with which she has done business for their cooperation.

Mrs. H. Adelle Cooper has received word that her son Merrill who has been with the Signal Corps Battalion at Camp Crowder, has been selected as one of 65 men who will attend a special radio and communications school. This school is located some-

They then used the new bridge path to Forest Preserve Headquarters, Division No. 5. The Palos Association is all private owned horses. After a delightful ride through the woods they ended at Rivers, probably a tired but very happy bunch. Now the Palos Hills Horsemen Association announce that on June 21 they will hold a buggy ride. Keep on Your Toes With Enriched Bread!
(See Recipes Below)

Bread 'n Butter

Bread is one of our oldest and best-like foods. But bread, like many of our other foods, has changed considerably during the last two years. You haven't noticed? Well, it's been enriched and fortified with the B-vitamins, often called morale builders because of the fine things they do for your system, digestion and disposition.

Iron, the magic helper that peps up your system by making hard-working red blood cells, has also been added to bread along with vitamin B.

But not just bread has these new, essential elements. Flour that you use for your own baking has been fortified with the B-vitamins and iron. There isn't much difference in enriched flour or bread and in ordinary bread or flour, except in some cases where the color is slightly creamier. But the nutritive value is so much greater that it's to your advantage to use it.

Although Saturday baking and the resultant shelves and pantries filled with crusty, sweet-smelling loaves of bread are becoming things of the past, perhaps you still feel the occasional desire to turn out a silky textured, moist, delicious loaf of good bread.

Rhythmical kneading is the secret of good bread. Rock the dough under the palms of the hands in three-quarter time until it gets the satiny-like sheen.

*Twisted Loaf.

(Makes 4 1-pound loaves)

2 cups milk
¼ cup sugar
4 teaspoons salt
2 tablespoons shortening
2 cups water
1 cake yeast
¼ cup lukewarm water
12 cups sifted flour (about)
Scald milk. Add sugar, salt, shortening and water. Cool to lukewarm. Add yeast which has been softened in ¼ cup lukewarm water. Add flour gradually, mixing it in thoroughly. When dough is stiff, turn out on a lightly floured board and knead until satiny and smooth. Shape into smooth ball and place in a greased pan. Cover and let rise in a warm place (80-85 degrees F.) until doubled in bulk. When light, divide into four equal portions. Roll each portion into a smooth ball. Cover well and let rise 10 to 15 minutes. Mold into loaves. For a twisted loaf, roll dough under hand to 2 rolls about 2 inches thick and longer than the length of the pan. Twist the 2 rolls around each other and place in greased pans. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Bake in a moderately hot (400-425-degree) oven 40 to 45 minutes.

A nutritious coffee cake that is a tried and true sugar skimmer adds zest to breakfasts. Made with either of the two dried fruit fillings given here, it is delightful:

Sweet Yeast Dough.

(Makes 2 12-inch rings or 3½ dozen rolls)
2 cakes yeast

Lynn Says:

Good things come in little packages. This little saying applies perfectly to the concentrated foods like dried fruits—prunes, apricots, figs, apples, pears, raisins and peaches.

Now more than ever before you'll want to use more of them because they can solve your sweet tooth problem, in addition to acting as important blood builders and keeping your body in good working condition because of their important vitamin and mineral values.

You can appreciate why they do all this for you when you realize that to make one pound of the dried fruit it takes several pounds of fresh fruit. For example, prunes require three pounds of fresh fruit to make one pound dried; raisins, four pounds fresh fruit, apples, six to nine pounds fresh fruit, pears and figs both require three pounds of fresh fruit, while apricots and peaches five and one-half pounds of the fresh to make the dried product.

Lost and Found

By VIC YARDMAN

(Associated Newspapers—WNU Service.)

THE first thing that made Norma angry was her inability to find the right trail leading back to the ranch. Secondly, the handsome, bronzed cowboy who was descending the slope, ostensibly to rescue her, was Fletcher Carey. She hated Fletcher Carey because he was so good-natured and popular and likeable, yet so wholly indifferent, because she was so free and easy with all the other cowboys on the ranch. She was, he thought, not decent.

She wondered how Fletcher Carey would have acted if he but knew her apparent free and easy attitude toward the other cowboys was merely a means of taunt, an assertion of independence and lack of interest at what Fletcher Carey thought of her.

Thirdly, Norma was angry because of her present helplessness; because it was fast growing dark and she was afraid and she'd have to depend upon Fletcher Carey to bring her safely back to the ranch. This third reason for her anger fairly made her boil inside. It was going to be difficult, having to depend on a man she hated.

Fletcher Carey came loping along the trail, sitting on his horse in that casual western fashion that is the very personification of grace, and grinned at her. Actually grinned. Norma's face flamed.

"Hello," he said innocently, bringing his black horse to a halt. "Lost?" Norma glared at him icily. "No," she said, her words dripping with sarcasm. "I have a date with the big bad wolf. He's due any moment."

"I—I guess I'll ride, if you don't mind." She looked up at him.

Fletcher Carey arched his brows in the faintest of surprise gestures. "Oh," he said. "Well, well. Forgive my curiosity." He made a clucking sound with his tongue and the black moved without.

Norma waited, without looking around. She felt sure he'd come back. He'd never dare to leave her alone out here. Why, even a stupid cowboy like Fletcher Carey must have known she was kidding. Perhaps the idiot had misinterpreted her wisecrack. Perhaps he thought by "big bad wolf" she'd meant one of the ranch cowboys.

Impulsively Norma turned and rode down the trail in the direction taken by Fletcher Carey. She rode slowly at first, half expecting to meet him coming back. But she didn't, and it was growing dark, rapidly. Somewhere up on the slope of the mountain a bobcat howled, and a little shiver ran down her spine. She touched spurs to her horse's flank, and the animal leaped ahead.

And all the while Norma was fairly boiling inside. Of all the rude, ignorant, conceited men she'd had the ill fortune to meet, Fletcher Carey sure took the prize. She'd see that he lost his job for this. Then, bitterly, she remembered that he owned a half interest in the Double 6, and it would be rather difficult getting him fired.

Something stirred in the bushes beside the trail. Her horse shied, nearly upsetting her, and went racing down the trail. Norma's heart began to thump. They entered a grove of evergreens, which shut out the last remaining vestige of daylight. Ahead there was nothing but black stillness.

Suddenly the horse stopped short, and Norma went sliding up around its neck. She pushed herself back and clucked frantically, digging in her spurs. Something swept past her head. She sensed, rather than felt its presence, and her breath caught.

In the next instant her horse was rearing on its hind legs, striking out in the dark. The air was suddenly filled with a strange, unpleasant odor. She went hurtling into space, struck with a sickening thud—then a gray curtain of nothingness closed about her.

When Norma opened her eyes she was lying on a bed of fir boughs. There was a fire a few feet away, over which a man was stooped, laying sticks on crosswise. She sat up with a start, remembering. The man turned and grinned.

"Hello," he said. "Remember me?"

"I remember everything but you," said Norma, self-possessed once more now that Fletcher Carey was there to protect her. "What happened?"

"Your horse shied at a skunk and threw you. Pesky things, skunks." "I can agree with that," said Norma meaningly, and immediately hoped he wouldn't get her point. "There was something overhead."

"An owl," said Fletcher Carey. He came and sat down beside her. Your horse went back to the ranch. We'll have to ride double."

"I'd rather walk," Norma said coldly.

Fletcher Carey shrugged. "Suit yourself." He stood up and moved off in the darkness. "Douse the fire before leaving," he called.

Norma got to her feet in a hurry. "Oh!—Wait!—Mr. Carey!" She started running, frantically, and almost collided with Fletcher Carey coming back. "Whoa!" he grinned. "You'd better not start by running. It's a long ways."

"I—I guess I'll ride, if you don't mind." She looked up at him, meekly, almost cringing, fear of the dark in her eyes. The grin vanished from Fletcher Carey's lips.

"Sure," he said. "Wait here." He went away again. Norma watched the spot where he disappeared until he came into the light, leading his black. "Up you go," he said cupping his hands.

When he went to douse the fire, she had an impulsive desire to strike the black smartly and race off, leaving him there. But she didn't. She waited, and Fletcher swung up behind her, grinning once more, and they started ahead.

He guided the black, with his arms about her waist, which made her resentful at first, and later sent a little tingle of pleasure coursing through her veins. Suddenly she was regretful for everything; she wanted to be friends, wanted to know the man better. She wanted to tell him so, but her pride suppressed the longing.

And so they rode along in silence. Norma leaned against him, feeling safe and protected and curiously happy. His voice, coming out of the blackness, startled her. Fletcher Carey said:

"I guess I've treated you pretty mean. I'm sorry. We don't ordinarily treat our guests like this. But—with you—it was different."

"Different?" she asked, her heart beginning to pound.

"I fell in love with you—a month ago." His voice was apologetic. "Sorry. Didn't mean to. Just one of those things. Figured you had no use for me, so I steered clear. Kinda got under my skin, the way you played around with the hands."

He paused. "Fact is, I been following you all afternoon. Hoped you'd get lost so's I could have this chance. Sorry now, though."

Norma felt the tenseness of his body. His tone was casual, but she knew it had taken an effort to speak at all. And it wasn't because she was a guest either. The Double 6 had a waiting list. It was—it must be—

Suddenly she laughed, a little silly laugh—contented, happy. "Fact is, cowboy," she said, trying to sound as casual as he, "I knew you were following me, and got lost on purpose."

The black stopped, then went ahead again. Its reins hung loose, but the lights of the ranch house showed ahead and the animal was hungry.

'Kathleen' a Kentuckian, Not From 'Green Island'

Despite the fact that the song, "I'll Take You Home Again Kathleen," tells of a home "across the ocean wild and wide," the fact is that it was written by a native of Virginia, Thomas Paine Westendorf.

"In the fall of 1875," states James J. Geller in "Famous Songs and Their Stories," "he (Westendorf) and his family were residing in Louisville, Ky., but the sudden death of a son brought illness to Mrs. Westendorf and caused her physician to prescribe a change in surroundings."

"While reading to her one evening, Westendorf suddenly laid down his book and both began to discuss their future plans. His wife indicated a desire to join her mother in New York, but dreaded the long winter journey and the husband tenderly promised to accompany her there in the spring. Having thus assured her, he continued with his book until she retired for the night. In the stillness of the following hours, Westendorf began slowly to improvise at random on the piano. Suddenly his eye lit upon a frayed copy of an old composition written by one George Parsely and titled, 'Barney, I'll Take You Home Again.' The title of this song yielded the very sentiment and thought talked over earlier in the evening. In an hour he had written the words and music of 'I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen.'

"... The new ballad went off to a Cincinnati publisher... Westendorf's song was introduced in Macaulay's theater in Louisville at a benefit for a Catholic church by a local tenor singer. The words and sentiment of the ballad revived fond memories of the Emerald Isle in most of the parishioners, who were of Irish extraction, and their countrymen soon adopted 'I'll Take You Home Again Kathleen.'"

Legal Holidays

According to the Constitution neither congress nor the President has the power to prescribe legal holidays except in the District of Columbia and the U. S. territorial possessions, says Collier's. Nevertheless, congress has recognized the following days as public holidays: New Year's day, Washington's birthday, Memorial day, the Fourth of July, Labor day, and Christmas.

Since most of these holidays have been declared local holidays by the individual states, they can be said to be national and legal holidays. The President proclaims Thanksgiving a holiday.

When Your Back Hurts—

And Your Strength and Energy Is Below Par

It may be caused by disorder of kidney function that permits poisonous waste to accumulate. For truly many people feel tired, weak and miserable when the kidneys fail to remove excess acids and other waste matter from the blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling. Sometimes frequent and scanty urination with smarting and burning is another sign that something is wrong with the kidneys or bladder. There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won countrywide approval than on something less favorably known. MOTOR RACING CLASSIC TO
BE HELD AT SOLDIERS' FIELD
SATURDAY & SUNDAY, MAY 30 & 31

Soldier Field, Chicago, with its seating capacity of 90,000 and banked half mile cinder track will be the scene of the "First Annual Motor Racing Classic" when the finest stars of the roaring road will contest in the 500 lap, Big Car and midjet car races, to be held on Saturday and Sunday, May 30th and 31st, with the races scheduled to start at 2:30 p.m. with the time trials at 1 p.m. featuring a series of sprints and winding up with the 500 Lap classic on Memorial Day, Saturday, May 30th, with the finals of the races scheduled for Sunday, May 31st at Soldier Field.

Due to the fact that the Indianapolis races have been cancelled this year, most of the stars that had anticipated racing there, will compete at the Soldier Field Memorial Day Races.

In addition to the Races there will be a series of spectacular stunts by the Hollywood Hell Drivers who will roll cars over and over with Lucky Lott, leaping his car over two transcontinental busses.

The Congress of Daredevils who will gather at Soldier Field on Saturday and Sunday, May 30th and 31st will compete in the most hazardous and hair raising stunts ever conceived by man.

Motorcycle racing enthusiasts have not been overlooked in the Racing Jamboree, with 50 laps of cycle racing with top prize money offered to the winners of the various heats.

Big Cars, Midjet cars, motorcycle races, Congress of Daredevils Thrill Circus, will be the "four star" attraction of the Motor Racing Classic at Soldier Field, Chicago, on Saturday and Sunday, May 30 and 31.

Jack Dempsey the ex heavyweight champion of the world, will be Judge with Barney Oldfield, the starter of the events.

Use Substitute
For Sugar Now

The blue ribbon cake baker these days is the homemaker who can switch back and forth between molasses, corn sirup, honey, sorghum and sugar and still turn out a good product. That's the opinion of food research workers in laboratories at the department of home economics, University of Illinois College of Agriculture.

In fact, they say it's no trick at all to use corn sirup, molasses and sorghum instead of sugar, if a few rules are remembered.

Rule one is to use the same measure of sirup as of sugar. If the recipe calls for one cup of sugar, a cup of sirup may replace it.

Rule two is to allow for the fact that sirups contain water. Therefore the liquid in the recipe will have to be reduced. For each cup of sirup used, reduce the other liquid by one fourth cup. For example, 1 cup of sugar and one half cup milk could be converted to one cup of sirup and one fourth cup of milk.

Rule three is to double the vanilla and increase the salt slightly for corn sirup cakes. The taste is better. Spice cakes made with corn sirup might be spiced a little more. Vanilla is omitted in honey, sorghum and molasses cakes.

Rule four is that for sirups such as sorghum and molasses, one half teaspoon of soda is added for each cup of sirup. Soda has leavening power. Therefore the amount of baking powder must be reduced. A good rule is to reduce the baking powder one teaspoon for each one fourth teaspoon of soda used.

The usual conventional method of mixing a cake will be quite satisfactory. Perhaps the only difference is to use more strokes to mix the liquid and the dry ingredients. Sirup cakes should be baked in a moderate oven, 375 degrees fahrenheit, about 30 to 35 minutes.

Better textured cakes result from using half sugar and half corn sirup, although an all sirup cake is considered quite acceptable. It is not quite as sweet as the ordinary cake. Sorghum and molasses made cakes verge toward the gingerbread idea, but if a half and half combination is worked out with sugar, the cakes are very light and velvety.

Enlist Your Coal Bin
For the Duration

Estimates agree it will take 100 million EXTRA tons of coal this year to provide power for war industry and transportation. Coal must be moved in a steady, near-capacity stream if needs of homes and war are to be met.

It means bins must NOT be filled as usual in late summer or fall—or the problem of supply will surely become acute. It means your winter fuel should be ordered and stored NOW—while a surplus over war needs exists.

Do this and you aid a serious task. You benefit from a minimum price, the best of service, a choice of the exact, high-value coal you prefer. So this week, enlist YOUR coal bin for the duration!
